To our Friends and Relatives:

Your support of Dream of Wild Health restores health and well-being in the Native American community by recovering knowledge of and access to healthy indigenous foods, medicines and life ways. Last year we touched the lives of over 5,500 people, connecting our urban community with the land, healthy fresh produce and the knowledge of how to grow and prepare it. From small city gardens to our 10 acre farm, native fruit orchard, and pollinator meadow, Dream of Wild Health improved access to healthy foods.

You are part of a growing number of supporters that deeply appreciate the priority of growing out, preserving and developing food products from our indigenous collection. This season we focused on building up our seed supply of Dakota Flour Corn, Dakota Hominy Corn, Cree Corn, and Amber Chip Corn. It was an incredible experience to watch our Cora's Kids sing and dance while they planted the Dakota corn. We also grew out Black Turtle Beans, Rabbit Beans, and some Mandan Shield Figure Beans. It brings hope and inspiration to see DWH mission being lived out as our youth learn, grow, plant and harvest healthy foods and become healthier, culturally grounded leaders.

We are expanding collaboration with our community partners, increasing access to educational programs and sharing knowledge. As DWH nurtures emergence of the 'Indigenous Food Network' the Native American community is creating a strong web of expertise and access to healthy, indigenous foods. Together we have greater collective impact for the change our youth demand.

Please support Dream of Wild Health with a significant contribution. Join other donors, funders and volunteers in creating healthy Native American communities today.

Thank you for supporting Dream of Wild Health as we grow leaders and the indigenous foods and medicines that are essential to restoring health in Native communities.
